

CALL:

Content Area Language and Literacy

A Partnership Between Ventura County Office of Education & California Reading and Literature Project

The goal of the Content Area Language and Literacy (CALL) program is to provide secondary content area teachers with the knowledge and research-based strategies to foster the development of academic language and literacy in their students. To meet the literacy demands of the 21st century, students will need to have the level of academic literacy that will enable them to read and write independently within an academic context. With a special emphasis on support for adolescent English Learners, CALL Institutes provide educators with the necessary tools and skills to analyze the academic language demands.

CRLP Institute

Using course-specific texts and materials, CALL supports teachers in designing effective instruction that meets English Learner Language and Literacy demands. Middle and High School Teachers will receive four days of training over three months. This gives participants time to practice strategies and return with ideas and questions to share with colleagues.

Benefits of the VCOE partnership include support for participants in coaching peers. Department chairs, content area coaches, and content specialists who have completed the Content Area Language and Literacy Institutes are eligible to participate in the VCOE coach's network to advance teacher leadership and coaching skills.

This training is specifically designed for Social Studies, Science, Math, and Language Arts content area teachers.
